

I don't remember what platform (s) this happened on , but I remember hitting an error where the version of ss did not have the -H flag for skipping the header . That's why we went with sed 1 d instead here . Feel free to ignore if this only applies to old versions we won't see anymore .

